I talked to Hallstein this afternoon. His conversations with Maurice Schumann have gone [redacted] badly, since Maurice has continued to base himself on his own text for a Saar settlement. The conversations will continue tomorrow, and the Germans will return to Bonn Sunday night. Once the positions have been made clear, and the minutes of these conversations are complete, it may well be advisable, with the consent of both parties, for the U.S. and the U.K. to intervene.

We had a dinner for 28 people tonight at the house with, amongst others, [redacted] Jacqueline Patenôtre, the Ismays, the Van Boetzelaers and the Norstads.
